

U.S. Reporter's Ouster Is Lifted

Paris, March 7 (AP)—Benjamin Bradlee, Newsweek magazine correspondent for France, was ordered by police last night to leave the country within 48 hours. Evidently it was because of articles about Algeria but today the order was suspended indefinitely.

Four policemen took Bradlee to national police headquarters last night where he was served with the expulsion order.

Bradlee said later he had been unable to get any official information as to why he had been expelled. However, French sources said the order was issued because he had sought on a recent visit to Algeria to interview representatives of a so-called Army of Liberation and on grounds that French officials felt he had introduced anti-French propaganda into articles he wrote.

Tonight Bradlee was told by Louis Faucon, chief of Premier Guy Mollet's Cabinet, that the order had been "suspended indefinitely pending discussions between the Premier's office, the Foreign Office and the Interior Department."